J D WETHERSPOON'S PINTS SET TO GO LIKE THE WIND

J D Wetherspoon's Flagship pub installs qr5 wind turbine as part of £1.8m green refit

The Kettleby Cross 'super-pub' in Melton plans to use 50% less energy than a similar-sized Wetherspoon establishment following a post-fire refit. Its electricity will be generated from a 'quietrevolution qr5' wind turbine combined with a range of other energy saving methods.

The fire in 2010, said to be caused by an electrical fault near a fireplace. John Hutson, J D Wetherspoon chief executive, commented on the refurbishment: "We want to take a lead and think this will make us more attractive to customers."

Maeve Hurley, CEO of quietrevolution, said: "JD Wetherspoon is right to take the lead in changing the way pubs treat their energy consumption. Our engineers have worked hard to create a turbine that will be industry leading and recognised as a viable investment option around the world."

quietrevolution, which recently closed a £5 million project finance deal with Hazel Capital for the deployment of its innovative turbine, has been expanding its distributed generation model in the UK and across the globe and was recently named one of the fastest growing cleantech companies in Europe.
